Over the last decades discourse has taken up an important place in the field of linguistics. Nowadays the interface between grammar and language use is a demanding topic which many scholars deal with on a formal, functional and typological basis. Since the focus of this year's conference will be the relation between discourse and grammar, we especially welcome contributions in the following domains:

- formal, functional and typological accounts of grammatical and discourse-related issues;
- formal, functional and typological analyses of morphological and syntactic structures;
- formal, functional and typological accounts of textual phenomena (inversion, discourse anaphora, deixis, etc.);
- historical pragmatics;
- pragmatic analyses of functionally-grounded constructions;
- theoretical studies aiming at grounding formal or functional accounts within a theory of science.

Scholars are also encouraged to organize workshops dealing with specific topics. Workshops should be open to all participants and favor the debate on ongoing research.
