Deadline February 13, 2004

The Annual Conference on Teaching Spanish to Native Speakers is held in Las Cruces, NM. The conference is dedicated to the dissemination of information regarding issues, methods, materials, and research concerning the development of Spanish language skills among individuals of Spanish-speaking backgrounds. The conference is open to community members, teachers of all levels (K-12, Adult Basic Education, Community College, University), and researchers who wish to share and learn about the unique challenges of instructing this diverse group of language learners.

Call for Papers

Topics may be drawn from any discipline, but should be broadly related to advancing knowledge of this growing field by identifying the unique social or linguistic characteristics of Native Spanish Speakers (e.g. issues in identity, social history, dialect, proficiency, etc.), developing pedagogical theory and/or implementing pedagogical techniques that address the specific needs of Spanish speakers.

Mail, fax or e-mail the information to either of the Conference Co-Chairs
Cecilia R. Pino (cecipino en nmsu edu) or Patricia MacGregor-Mendoza (pmacgreg en nmsu edu).
