ISSN-e: 2174-5218

Dear Colleague:

In 2020 the Revista de Investigación en Logopedia “Journal of Research in Speech Therapy” turned ten years. To celebrate it, and coinciding with the European day of the Speech and Language Therapy, a special conference was organized at the Complutense University of Madrid which, in the end, could not take place due to the international health crisis. In this fateful context, the Revista de Investigación en Logopedia not only did not cease in its efforts to provide colleagues from all over the world, but especially from Spain and Latin America, with the best research in the discipline, but also proposed to make an additional effort that has resulted in the special issue that is now published. This special issue, coordinated by Dr. Alfonso Igualada, shows the fruits of this constant work developed not only by the authors, reviewers and editor, but also by the other members who make up the Journal, including the thousands of readers who read, consult and write to us daily.

If during the year 2020 we surpassed the record of articles received for evaluation and the number of total downloads of our manuscripts, in this year 2021 we wish nothing more than to continue to have your attention, interest and respect; for this we work in the Revista de Investigación en Logopedia incessantly. In fact, the second issue of the year 2021 will be published soon, showing that the enormous joy that this special issue brings us does not stop us in the task that we have entrusted 11 years ago, at the dawn of the Revista de Investigación en Logopedia, namely, “to contribute to the scientific advancement of speech and language therapy internationally”.

I have the obligation and also the satisfaction to take the opportunity of publishing our first special issue to thank the work done by the workers and colleagues of the Editorial Complutense. They work for making our scientific goals true with respect of the high ethical commitment that a public entity such as the Complutense University of Madrid maintains and promotes. Thanks also to the Editors and the Scientific Team and my sincere gratitude to the indefatigable reviewers. We are fully aware of the work we ask of you and the work you do.

Thanks to all of you for these 11 years together and for the opportunity to celebrate the first decade with this magnificent special issue!

Sincerely

Miguel Lazaro Lopez-Villaseñor
Director of the Revista de Investigación en Logopedia
